History of the Prague University of Economics

The Prague University of Economics, known in Czech as Vysoká škola ekonomická v Praze (VŠE), was founded in 1953 amidst the post-war reconstruction of Czechoslovakia. It was established to provide specialized education in economics and business, reflecting the country's need for a skilled workforce in these sectors. Over the decades, VŠE has evolved to adapt to the changing economic landscape, incorporating modern educational practices and expanding its curriculum to include a wide range of disciplines.

Initially, the university focused primarily on economic theory and state planning, which were aligned with the socialist framework of the time. However, after the Velvet Revolution in 1989, VŠE underwent significant transformations, embracing market-oriented principles and international standards of education. This shift marked the beginning of its journey towards becoming a globally recognized institution.

Today, the Prague University of Economics boasts a rich history and a commitment to academic excellence, evidenced by its strong emphasis on research and its partnerships with various international universities.
